3 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW

CUBA ROLLS OUT RED CARPET FOR HISTORIC OBAMA VISIT

President Barack Obama embarked Sunday on a historic trip to Cuba where a Communist government that vilified the United States for decades prepared a red-carpet welcome. Lifting off from Andrews Air Force Base outside Washington, D.C., Obama headed for Havana where the sight of Air Force One, America's iconic presidential jet, touching down on Cuban soil would have been unimaginable not long ago. The three-day trip, the first by a U.S. president in 88 years, is the culmination of a diplomatic opening announced by Obama and Cuban President Raul Castro in December 2014, ending a Cold War-era estrangement that began when the Cuban revolution ousted a pro-American government in 1959. SOME US MARINES ON GROUND IN IRAQ TO FIGHT ISIS: US MILITARY

A detachment of U.S. Marines is on the ground in Iraq to support U.S. and coalition efforts against Islamic State, the U.S. military said Sunday. A group of Marines from the 26th Marine Expeditionary Unit (MEU) will add to the U.S. forces already in Iraq battling Islamic State, it said. The 26th MEU is currently deployed in the U.S. 5th Fleet area of operations, which covers the Persian Gulf, Red Sea, Arabian Sea and parts of the Indian Ocean.

RUSSIA MOURNS PLANE CRASH VICTIMS AS INVESTIGATION BEGINS

Relatives gathered to mourn the 62 victims of a passenger jet crash in southern Russia on Sunday and officials warned an investigation could take weeks to determine the cause of the downing. At Rostov-on-Don airport about 400 people paid their respects to the 55 passengers and seven crew who died when the Boeing 737-800, operated by Dubai-based budget carrier Flydubai, crashed in the early hours of Saturday. Bereaved relatives laid red and white carnations on a growing pile of flowers, candles and children's toys, framed by photos of the dead. "We mourn," read an inscription listing the victims' names. "What happened cannot be expressed with any words. I can't comprehend how the relatives of the victims will go on living," Rostov resident Marina Bondar told Reuters. REUTERS

BOLARIS' WEATHER WATCH: SPRING SNOW MOVES OUT, MILDER TEMPERATURES AHEAD

Bolaris' Weather Watch

@weathersavior

Waking up this morning, some of you will be shoveling a heavy, wet snow while others will be skipping along to work with no snow. The coastal snowstorm is now off the Southern New England coast and pounding a good chunk of New England with heavy, wet snow as late-season skiers rejoice.

In the storm's wake, a blustery first Monday of spring will have us reaching for the winter coats this morning.

We really can't complain too much this winter season. Despite the January blizzard, much of this winter has been snow-free and will go down as one of our milder winters; thank you, El Niño.

By Wednesday the thermometer will begin to surge as the 60s become common once again, except along the coastal locations, as the chilly Atlantic will put a lid on the temperature rise.

Your second half of the week should be on the milder side of the ledger as well, with readings still in the 60s. Expect a cool front to start pushing through on Friday with the chance of a few showers. Watching the potential for a frog choker (that just means heavy rains; personally, I love frogs), arrival time for one looks like the second half of this upcoming weekend.

Philly

Today: Sunshine returning, blustery and quite cool. High of 48.

Tuesday: Golden sun, bit breezy. High of 52.

Wednesday: Spring breezes, milder with a high of 65.

Thursday: Windy and mild with a high of 67.

Friday: A few showers, windy and mild with high of 65.

Watch for the possibility of heavy rain for this coming Sunday.

ASK SEPTA: CROWDED BUSES AND SEPTA KEY GETS CLOSER

SEPTA GM Jeffrey Knueppel answers Metro readers' questions about trash at stations, overcrowded buses and the availability of SEPTA monthly passes.

JEFFREY KNUEPPEL

Ask SEPTA

SEPTA GENERAL MANAGER

Send your questions about SEPTA services and other issues about the transit agency to sam.newhouse@metro.us. They will be forwarded to SEPTA, who will answer them in a special monthly column here.

Is there someone responsible for removing the trash that's been blown/thrown onto the tracks at the 69th Street Norristown High Speed Line Station? My hope is that they're waiting for a warm spring day to clean up. It doesn't have to look like Disneyworld or Switzerland, but c'mon, make an effort!

Jeffrey Knueppel: The Norristown High Speed Line train arrival area at 69th Street tends to act as a wind tunnel catch-all, and trash does accumulate there. In addition to daily station cleaning efforts, our janitorial crew performs regular clean-outs of the track area on a bi-weekly basis.

The next scheduled clean out is this week [starting Monday]. During the periods between the clean-outs, trash may get blown back into the track area and we ask for your understanding that it will be addressed shortly.

I am a daily Regional Rail rider and am only able to buy the monthly passes by having to travel to the Levittown or Philadelphia stations. There is currently a kiosk at the Trenton Transit Center where you can only purchase daily tickets; it'd be convenient for riders to be able to buy a monthly pass as well. Is this possible?

JK: Currently, in addition to in-person sales locations, we offer purchases of monthly passes on our website, Shop.septa.org. All major credit cards are accepted, and the pass is mailed to your shipping address.

In the future, we will expand purchasing options with our new fare system, the SEPTA Key, which will utilize Smart Card technology. Kiosks (fare vending devices) will offer more fare purchase options, including weekly and monthly passes. In addition, customers will be able to have their pass purchase automatically added to their account each week or month.

Customers will also be able to purchase passes and other fares from any location — such as their home or office — via the web. We encourage you to check the SEPTA website at Septa.org/key for more information about the program.

The 57 bus is terrible. Every day after work at least five buses drive by, completely packed. Can someone explain why and what can be done?

JK: Route 57 is one of our busiest routes, with a daily ridership of over 11,000 passengers. While you did not mention exactly what time you are traveling, significant ridership levels occur during the evening peak hours between 4 and 6 p.m., and some level of crowding can be experienced.

Unfortunately, not all of our customers will move to the back of the vehicle to make room for others, which can lead to overcrowding on subsequent trips. Operators are trained to request that standees move to the rear of the bus in order to accommodate all waiting customers.

Photos: Residents shed tears as North Philly project imploded

The aged high-rise housing project towers of the Blumberg-Sharswood complex came toppling down this weekend.

The Philadelphia Housing Authority (PHA) has begun building new, low-rise housing projects in the area and demolished the towers to reuse that land.

PHA president and CEO Kelvin Jeremiah told Metro that part of the motive behind the demolition was because the old-fashioned, high-rise towers were a magnet for criminal activity and a source of blight in the neighborhood.

Watch the video of the tower going down on Metro.us.

Three people found dead in Pennsylvania Turnpike toll booth

Three men were found dead on Sunday at a Pennsylvania Turnpike toll booth west of the state capital of Harrisburg, authorities reported, and local news media reported that at least one of them was a toll booth collector who had been fatally shot.

Fulton County Coroner Berley Souders confirmed that three people were found dead at around 7:15 a.m. All three victims were males, he said. He declined to provide additional information.

At least one toll booth operator at the turnpike's Fort Littleton exit in Fulton County, about 65 miles west of Harrisburg, was fatally shot in what appeared to be an attempted robbery, turnpike officials told local media.

None of the victims have been identified. Souders did not say whether any of the victims were toll booth operators.

State police were in charge of the "complicated investigation scene," a state Turnpike Commission spokesman, Carl DeFebo, said in an interview.

PSPCA humane enforcement officers carry dogs out of the Holmesburg home. PSPCA

PSPCA removes 15 dogs from Holmesburg home

A recent investigation by the PSPCA discovered 17 animals, 15 dogs and two cats, living in filthy conditions.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Animal cruelty prevention officers removed 17 animals living in "filthy conditions" from a Northeast Philly home on Saturday.

The PSPCA removed 15 small dogs and two cats from a home on the 7900 block of Marsden Street in Holmesburg.

"Our humane law enforcement officers work to protect animals not simply from acts of blatant cruelty, but additionally from situations of neglect where their health and well-being may be at risk," Jerry Buckley, CEO of the PSPCA, said in a statement.

"The Pennsylvania SPCA is the only animal welfare organization in the region equipped to handle cases involving such large numbers of animals, as evidenced in this case."

PSPCA officers obtained a warrant to enter the home after Philly police tipped them off that several animals were living in "unsanitary conditions" in the home, the PSPCA said.

The investigation is ongoing, but the owner is expected to face cruelty charges.

All animals will be treated at the PSPCA's Erie Avenue shelter and may be surrendered by the owner, depending on the outcome of the investigation.

Anyone with any information about cases involving animal cruelty is asked to call the Pennsylvania SPCA's Cruelty Hotline at 866-601-SPCA. Tips can be left anonymously.

Legal experts: Gawker could still win Hulk Hogan case despite $115 million verdict

The $115 million a Florida jury awarded to Hulk Hogan on Friday may seem like a big blow to the website Gawker, but the media company could ultimately prevail in its court battle with the flamboyant wrestler, legal experts say.

Hogan had sued the website for posting a video clip in 2012 featuring him having sex with the wife of his then-best friend, the radio shock jock Bubba "The Love Sponge" Clem.

Both sides cast the case as a crucial test of the balance between the right to privacy and freedom of the press in the digital age, when a celebrity sex tape can reach millions of viewers with one click of a button.

"The jury's decision is somewhat of a black box," said Mary-Rose Papandrea, a University of North Carolina law professor who previously represented the National Enquirer, a tabloid known for its aggressive reporting on celebrity scandals. "It will be much more interesting and much more important as a legal issue to see what the appellate court says."

Hogan had argued that Gawker ignored basic journalistic ethics by failing to contact him before publishing and violated his privacy by including several seconds of explicit sexual activity as part of the video excerpt it posted.

"What's disturbing about Gawker isn't what they do in a vacuum," said Kenneth Turkel, one of Hogan's lawyers, during his closing argument. "It's how proud they are of it."

Gawker countered that Hogan's own penchant for publicly describing his sex life in detail had made the sex tape fair game.

Anti-Trump protest blocks Arizona road

Demonstrators briefly shut down an Arizona highway leading to a campaign rally for Donald Trump on Saturday while protesters rallied outside of Trump Tower in Manhattan to voice their opposition to the front-runner for the Republican presidential nomination.

Television news footage of the demonstration outside Phoenix showed dozens of protesters blocking traffic while holding signs that read "Dump Trump" and "Shut Down Trump."

The demonstrators eventually started marching down the highway. Later, some were seen nearing the rally at Fountain Hills, Arizona, before Trump arrived.

Three people were arrested, according to police in Maricopa County, where Joe Arpaio, a well-known critic of U.S. immigration policy and an ardent Trump supporter, serves as sheriff. Arpaio introduced Trump at the Fountain Hills event.

Video posted on news website Arizona Central's Facebook page showed a truck driving through a large group of protesters. Officers from the county police department worked to clear demonstrators from the motorist's path.

A woman is seen crying and shouting for officers to take responsibility to stop the vehicle, while a deputy sheriff shrugs at the suggestion.

Later at a rally in Tucson, Arizona, Trump said the protests were "disgraceful," and thanked police.

> Trump said to roaring cheers from the audience.

"I love our police, but we should do a little bit more of that, you'd have a lot less protesters, you'd have a lot less agitators," said Trump, who is favored to win his party's nomination for the Nov. 8 presidential election.

Several demonstrations also broke out during the later rally, prompting police to escort out a number of people.

Footage of the Tucson rally shows an attendee punching and kicking one demonstrator who is being escorted out. The clip also shows police removing the attacker.

Trump has come under fire from rivals for fueling unrest with his rhetoric. This week, he warned of riots if Republicans denied him the nomination at the party's convention.

In Trump's home city of New York, about 1,000 demonstrators marched from Central Park to Trump Tower, the billionaire developer's signature building on Fifth Avenue.

The crowd of mostly young people chanted and carried placards denouncing Trump. Some said police used pepper spray on them as they marched from the park.

Trump refuses to condemn violence at his election rallies

Scenes of mayhem have become increasingly common at Trump's rallies, which have been frequently interrupted by protesters.

Donald Trump GETTY IMAGES

Donald Trump said that "professional agitators" bore much of the blame for violence at his rallies as video showed a protester being beaten and another apparently being grabbed by Trump's campaign manager.

Speaking on ABC's "This Week", Trump defended campaign manager Corey Lewandowski and declined to condemn supporters who have attacked protesters at his increasingly chaotic rallies.

Nor did he back down from his warning that there would be riots in the streets if the Republican Party denied him the nomination for the November election, despite his being the most popular candidate among Republican voters.

Senior figures in the party are openly plotting to prevent Trump from becoming the nominee because they view him as insufficiently conservative, and Trump was due to privately meet with some party leaders in Washington on Monday, the Washington Post reported.

"I don't know what's going to happen, but I will say this, you're going to have a lot of unhappy people," he said on "This Week," predicting anger at the party's national convention in July should someone else end up the nominee. "I don't want to see riots, I don't want to see problems. But you're talking about millions of people." REUTERS

WHITE HOUSE

'UNITE OR DIE'

Most of the time D.C. is full of intrigue, vicious backbiting and petty disagreements, but there are the bad days, too. Right now both parties are dealing with nasty family feuds. Fixing the fractures before the general election is essential to victory, and that leads my three things to watch this week in politics.

1. TRUMP STUMPERS
Twice now the 2012 GOP presidential nominee, Mitt Romney, has thrown himself across the tracks to derail the Donald Trump train. So far, nada. The mainstreamers are getting ever more panicked over the idea Trump could be their nominee. So you'll hear even more talk this week about a "unity ticket." The idea is to unite all the Repubs who are against Trump behind a single challenger and force a contested convention. But either Kasich or Cruz has to abandon the race to make it work, and neither seems inclined to do so. Stay tuned ... and uh, stay off the tracks.

Opinion

CNN's Tom Foreman is the author of the new book "My Year of Running Dangerously."

2. CLINTONIAN CAUTION
The rift between Dems does not seem nearly as deep, but it is worrisome anyway. Hillary Clinton's camp is virtually certain they have the nomination wrapped up, but they'd like a strong showing in the western state primaries on Tuesday to seal the deal. After all, the sooner she can officially send Bernie Sanders home, the sooner she can start making nice with his followers. And she'll need them this November, especially if the GOP hits her as hard as expected.

3. MEANWHILE, BACK AT THE WHITE HOUSE
President Obama and his surrogates will continue pressing the case for a Senate hearing on his Supreme Court nominee, and they'll keep accusing the Republicans of playing politics. But the Dems are playing politics too. They already knew the GOPers were not going to give the nominee a nod, so they are milking it for all the headlines they can get. This is all about each side trying to make the other look unreasonable, but I think this week cooler heads will prevail and a deal is likely ... nah, just kidding. Nobody will budge.

McConnell rules out action this year on high court

Republican U.S. Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell on Sunday ruled out Senate confirmation of Democratic President Barack Obama's Supreme Court nominee this year, even if after the November election it appears the next president may pick a liberal who Republicans would like even less.

In television interviews, McConnell said Republican senators had no intention of confirming Democrat Obama's nominee, Merrick Garland, even if Democrats win the White House in November, putting them in the position to nominate someone more liberal than Garland when the new president takes office in January.

Mitch McConnell GETTY IMAGES

"I can't imagine that a Republican-majority Congress, in a lame-duck session, after the American people have spoken (in the election), would want to confirm [Garland]," McConnell told CNN.

"That's not going to happen," McConnell told Fox News on Sunday.

"The principle is the same, whether it's before the election or after the election. The principle is the American people are choosing their next president and their next president should pick this Supreme Court nominee."

Nominees to the lifetime Supreme Court post require Senate confirmation. But McConnell says the Republican-run Senate will not hold a hearing or a vote on Garland.

Republicans have said they want the next president to make the selection, hoping their party wins November's election. Billionaire businessman Donald Trump is the front-runner for the Republican presidential nomination. REUTERS

Two Indiana deputies shot, one fatally

Two sheriff's deputies in Indiana were shot, one of them fatally, while serving a warrant for drug-related offenses on Sunday, police said.

A suspect, who has not been identified, died in the incident, which took place in Russiaville in central Indiana, about 50 miles north of Indianapolis, they said.

Deputy Carl Koontz of the Howard County Sheriff's Department was killed in the incident, and Deputy Sgt. Jordan Buckley was wounded, Indiana State Police said. Buckley was in stable condition at a hospital.

The two were shot at after they knocked on the door of a residence to serve the warrant. They then returned fire.

"With an extremely heavy heart I'm sorry to report Deputy Carl Koontz has succumbed to his wounds," a State Police spokesman, Sgt. John Perrine, said on his Twitter feed.

Koontz had been with the State Police for nearly three years, while Buckley was a nine-year veteran of the force, according to Perrine.

Texas woman charged with putting 2-year-old daughter in heated oven

A mother in Texas has been arrested and charged with child abuse on suspicion of burning her 2-year-old daughter by putting the child into a heated oven, a sheriff's department said on Sunday.

Tasha Hatcher, 35, was arraigned over the weekend on a first-degree felony charge of causing serious bodily injury to a child for the incident that took place on Thursday, the Somervell County Sheriff's Office said in a statement.

The child, who was not identified by name, was taken by air to a burn center in Dallas, about 70 miles northeast of where the incident took place in Glen Rose.

Ben Affleck insists his back tattoo is fake

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

We've all been having a good laugh about the massive phoenix tattoo on Ben Affleck's back. Or, at least, his exes have. Jennifer Garner teased, Jennifer Lopez said it looks awful, the rest of us agreed. But I guess the joke is on us, as Affleck himself insists to no less reputable of a source than Mario Lopez that it's a "fake for a movie," so calm down. "I actually do have a number of tattoos," Affleck says. "But I try to have them in places where you don't have to do a lot of cover up. They get sort of addictive, tattoos, after a while." Fine, whatever. Does this mean he'd rather we talk about how suspiciously smooth and youthful his face looks all of a sudden?

Jenny Beavan explains her Oscars look

Hey, remember at the Oscars when Jenny Beavan won for her costume design work on "Mad Max" and instead of applauding, a bunch of guys — including "The Revenant" director Alejandro Inarritu, "Spotlight" director Tom McCarthy and Quincy Jones — just frowned at her, arms crossed, apparently reacting to her leather jacket and trousers awards show look? Well, Beavan doesn't. "I was blissfully unaware," she tells the Guardian. After doing the backstage rounds and getting back to her seat, she learned about the bubbling uproar on social media over her look. "The thing that lots of people are missing is that I was wearing a costume. An homage to 'Mad Max,'" she explains. "I have no interest in clothes other than what they tell me about a person. I am a storyteller — I'm not interested in fashion."

And while the hubbub over her attire and others' reactions to it has been maybe a little annoying, she's happy to be part of the conversation. "I'm a feminist with a small F," she says. "In fact, this is probably the first time 'gender' has ever been any kind of an issue for me. But if all this is important, then I would like to use it for good. I'll help, but I'm not willing to become a band leader."

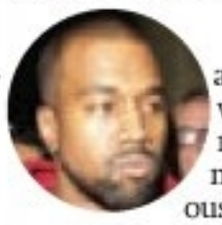
There's a mural of Kanye making out with Kanye



Artists find inspiration everywhere, so why not from the brightly burning flame Kanye West clearly holds for his absolute favorite person in the world? No, not Kim Kardashian, silly. I'm talking about West himself. Nobody loves Kanye like Kanye loves Kanye, which just so happens to be a concept that Australian artist Scott Marsh took and ran with, adorning a wall in Sydney with a 20-foot mural of West making out furiously with himself, hands all groping and impassioned. The image is based on a make-out photo of West and Kardashian from the 2015 Grammys red carpet, so the shorter West in this scenario has a rather impressive rump — something I don't think either Kanye would complain about in this scenario.

DAILY VIDEO

Foods you thought were healthy but actually aren't

It's really about time we stopped assuming something's healthy just because the commercials say so. This BuzzFeed video does a quick and snappy job of tackling how things like added sugars in granola and smoothies and extra sodium in "healthy" chip options can make packaged versions of supposedly healthy foods surprisingly less so. The best — and probably most widely reported — is that fast-food salads like the ones McDonald's has been pitching as a healthy alternative can sometimes have more calories than a Big Mac. And honestly, why are you getting a salad at McDonald's anyway? You're at McDonald's. Actually be at McDonald's.

Melissa Rauch takes comedy into her own hands

The "Big Bang Theory" actress wrote her own vehicle with the crazy "The Bronze."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

GETTY IMAGES

Melissa Rauch doesn't want to wait around. Rather than twiddle her thumbs before a great gig came up, she decided to create "The Bronze," an indie comedy co-written by herself (and her husband, Winston), in which the "Big Bang Theory" actress, 35, also stars as Hope, a star gymnast hobbled by an injury in her teens. When we catch up with her she's washed up and aggressive toward everyone, including an aspiring young gymnast (Haley Lu Richardson) who hires her as a trainer.

Was Hope a character that originated in your early comedy and improv days?

You know, it wasn't. It was really birthed out of the script. We decided on the story first and this world of celebrity. Once we started going into her psyche, she developed from there. Even in the outline phase she wasn't as, I guess, toxic and tough and vulgar. That all came once we started talking about how depressed and bitter she was. Now she's cut off from what she wants to do by her injury.

It's useful to follow characters who are dealing with the fallout of failure. We usually make movies about winners.

What fame does to the psyche is really interesting. It's worse when you're passionate about what made you famous. If you become a reality star, when that fame fades there's not that same desire to keep doing it. But when your fame is from your sport or from acting, and you're suddenly cut off, especially from an injury, then it just highlights your detachment.

You wrote this with your husband, Winston. What is it like writing with a spouse?

We started as writing partners before we got together as a couple. We met in college and wrote all though college together. If we started writing after we were a couple I don't know how that would have gone.

Melissa Rauch co-wrote and stars in "The Bronze," an indie comedy in which she plays a former star gymnast who never got over past glories. SONY PICTURES CLASSICS

That crazy sex scene

I usually hate asking about sex scenes, but there's one here that's so insane I have to ask: What on earth was that like to shoot?

[Laughs] We wrote that scene in the script with the words, "The most crazy, epic gymnastic sex scene ever." We bullet-pointed the moves we wanted to do, and our gymnastic coordinator, Kristina Baskett, who's a gymnast herself, choreographed it. We had two Cirque du Soleil dancers as stunt doubles — although Sebastian does a lot of the scenes. We shot that in a room in a motel which actually had those rings on the window. [Ed. Some of their maneuvers involve a pair of gymnastic-looking rings, as you probably surmised.] It's a handicap-accessible room. So people can go there and rent out the room if they want. Disinfect it first, but it's there and available to re-create the scene. I take no liability if anyone gets hurt.

"GROUNDHOG DAY"

Bill Murray killing himself with a toaster is one of the comedic high points of 1993's "Groundhog Day." PROVIDED

It's not clear how long Bill Murray's cantankerous weatherman spends living the same day. It could be a few months. Or, as director Harold Ramis suggested, it could be thousands of years. A smooth blend of the crowdpleasing and the unimaginably dark, it's a nice movie about a jerk being de-jerked. But its structure is also based on Elisabeth Kubler-Ross' model of the five stages of death. It's the kind of demon mainstream hit in which the stretch where our hero repeatedly kills himself is arguably the comedic highpoint. Keep your eyes peeled for the young Michael Shannon, as an excitable newlywed and WWF fanatic.

"THE FORBIDDEN ROOM"

Guy Maddin's "The Forbidden Room" was carefully made to look like it's an oldie. KINO LORBER

Unfailingly goofy Canadian retro-auteur Guy Maddin ("My Winnipeg") hasn't made a feature-length film in ages, which may explain why "The Forbidden Room" simply overflows with goodies. Indeed, this gonzo shape-shifter — which, as per usual with Maddin, looks like it's been forgotten for decades — contains at least a few dozen stories and about 10,000 jokes. By turns a submarine movie, a spelunking movie, a volcano movie and a lumberjack movie, it may drive you wonderfully crazy if you watch it in a single sit.

"UNFORGIVEN"

Clint Eastwood tends to be seen as a reactionary brute, delivering magnum force with a big, phallic gun. But look closely and he's more evolved, always questioning his yen for violence and his status as a badass icon. Each "Dirty Harry" sequel is a reaction to what cultural critics said about the films, tackling the likes of fascism, sexism and revenge. To make it loud and clear that he wasn't a Cro-Magnon, he made this 1992 Best Picture winner, playing a grizzled ex-outlaw who has to reactivate his dark side for a greater good. Audiences cheered at the climax, but it's still ugly, and contains one of the greatest final lines ever delivered by a main villain before he's offed: "I was building a house."

Frozen in tin time

Tintype photographer Giles Clement is in town.

RACHEL RACZKA
@rachelraczka
rachel.raczka@metro.us

Photographer Giles Clement claimed Instagram fame with his distinctly beautiful tintype portraits taken of stars such as Courtney Barnett, Fiona Apple and Hozier at SXSW and the Newport Folk Festival. The Nashville-based artist left his job as a news shooter in 2008, pursuing large format photography and selling gear before taking up tintypes full-time with his trusty Petzval lens and a mobile studio in 2012.

"[Shooting tintypes] is very involved and technically challenging, but it's very rewarding," he says. "You prepare and shoot a plate in five minutes, and you get that reward of whether it worked or not. The process is very addictive."

A tintype photo prints on a thin sheet of metal, impressing a one-of-a-kind positive that reads as glossy, heavily saturated and full of character. The process takes a few minutes (Clement says about five) and each tiny metal tintype is impossible to physically reproduce.

Clement decided to pursue tintypes full-time, and by chance found himself with a lease in Portland where he set up a temporary shop. While it was a bootstrapping learning experience, it wasn't totally a lucrative one. "It's not in anyone's vernacular anymore to go to a photo studio," he says. But when an invite to shoot at Willie Nelson's ranch during SXSW came his way, Clement packed up and hit the road.

A surfer gets the tintype treatment. ALL PHOTOS GILES CLEMENT

Nathaniel Rateliff & the Night Sweats.

"It wasn't just that event but a chain of events that kept putting me in different parts of the country," he explains. "I was living on the road, crashing at friend's houses or sleeping in the van. I spent February 2014 to August 2015 on the road full-time, going gig to gig, and seeing where it would take me."

Clement's tour led to a wide Instagram following, pickups from fashion, music and photography media alike, and bigger gigs, including the Newport Folk Festival's invite to shoot the performing bands. Clement keeps a studio in Nashville, where he hopes to develop a more prominent home base, but he'll be on a brief East Coast tour — with media assignments along the way — through the end of the month.

Local shops and vendors partner with Clement to host tintype pop-ups, where customers can book 20-minute sessions with the photographer and leave with a tintype of their very own. While the photo production naturally skewers antique, Clement encourages attendees to come as they are: "I don't do the whole Civil War reenactment thing," he laughs. "That's not my jam."

A tintype session with Clement includes the staging, processing and a single 4x5" photograph and the photographer assures us it's worth your time.

"A tintype can capture someone's personality, the pluses and the flaws," he says. "I haven't found another medium that captures as efficiently and honestly as a tintype."

Jonny Weston goes to the dark side

In "Allegiant," the young actor got to see what it's like to stir up an angry mob.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Jonny Weston, right, plays an enforcer working for a rebel leader-turned-maniac (Naomi Watts) in "The Divergent Series: Allegiant." MURRAY CLOSE

When we call him, Jonny Weston is busy watching "Scooby Doo."

"I just watch it to decompress," the actor says, talking to us after an intense weekend promoting the third "Divergent" film, "Allegiant," in which he plays Edgar, an intense bruiser with a thin mohawk. In the second film, "Insurgent," he was a member of the rebellion; in the third he's an enforcer for the fascist rebel leader played by Naomi Watts, hunting down our heroes, including Shailene Woodley's Tris and Theo James' Four.

GETTY IMAGES

But back to cartoons. In addition to being a "Scooby Doo" nut, he's way into "Rik and Morty," the Adult Swim great about a mad scientist grandfather and ever-nervous grandson traveling between planets and dimensions. "One of my goals when I get older is to play Rik in real life," Weston says. Failing that, he wouldn't mind just doing animated voice-overs. "I'd get to show up for work looking horrible, eating Doritos all day. I could get horribly fat and have this great career in cartoons."

Born in 1988, Weston is, like "Allegiant" stars Woodley and Miles Teller, very much part of the new wave of exciting young actors taking over Hollywood. Also like them, he's compulsively cast as characters far younger than he is. He's played high school age as recently as last year's "Project Almanac," and he was post-college age in the Zac Efron DJ saga "We Are Your Friends." Even his nice-guy roles tend to have an edge to them, as with his assertive, wheelchair-bound kid in love with a middle-age ex-punker (Juliette Lewis) in the indie "Kelly & Cal."

In "Allegiant" the downtrodden characters allow the dark side to take over. Still, Weston wanted to make sure Edgar wasn't just a brute. "None of them are sure what they're doing," he says. "They've been told they're doing the right thing. They assume the person they're following is doing the right thing."

Still, Edgar, at least, corrupts absolutely, seizing his newfound power to become a dangerous bully. One of the first scenes in "Allegiant" finds him lording over a gigantic mob, who are hooting and hollering over a rash of mock trials and executions of people who were part of the city before it was overthrown.

"It was basically 250 people surrounding me, all screaming at my command on every take," Weston remembers. "It was both humbling and its opposite: It was ego-blasting as well. I had 250 people, dressed like me, who were my people, who trusted in me as their military leader. I could turn the room with the tip of my tongue."

He says he gets why people, even presidential contenders, can't get enough of screaming crowds. "I felt like I was on fire," he says. "It was intoxicating."

Athletes are investing in workplace diversity portal Jopwell

Jopwell connects recruiters with minority job seekers who are underrepresented in tech and finance.

ALIZAH SALARIO
@Alirosa
alizah.salario@metro.us

Many companies pay lip service to increasing diversity. In some cases, it's a way to pat themselves on the back without actually making real efforts — or real change.

Change does require a little innovation, and that's why Ryan Williams and Porter Braswell launched Jopwell, a platform that connects black, Hispanic/Latino and Native American students and young professionals with top-notch companies, particularly in the tech and consulting industries.

As undergraduate interns on the trading floor at Goldman Sachs, they recognized the flaws inherent in the way big companies go about diversifying their workforces. Williams says they got their gigs through an internship program, and knew that while such programs make a difference, not everyone has access to them.

"When we were working [at Goldman], they would ask us to help them to recruit diverse candidates [from our universities]," says Williams. "We saw how companies in consulting were placing an emphasis on diversity, but their efforts weren't refreshed."

Since launching Jopwell in 2014, the friends have partnered with companies like Microsoft, Facebook and Goldman Sachs. Job seekers create an online profile and pursue openings, while recruiters can reach out to candidates they find online.

Their approach seems to be working: Since the beginning of 2016, the company has attracted numerous big-name investors, including Magic Johnson Enterprises and Joe Montana's Liquid 2 Ventures.

"Backing Jopwell fits into my mission — to support, empower and strengthen underserved communities. I also like working with companies that can really innovate the way we do things and make them better," says Johnson in an email.

Williams spoke to Metro about what new graduates seeking their first job can expect when entering the professional world.

HOW TO GET AHEAD

How does a diverse workforce change a company's culture?
Having different backgrounds in the room, having different perspectives, it helps to avoid groupthink and to ensure companies can build products and services that cater to customers as diverse as our country and our world is. If they are hiring a wide array [of employees,] I think it can change culture [more so than diversity training.] It has a financial impact on the bottom line.

What's your advice for first-time job seekers?
Explore options you might not have considered.

The talent and the ethnically diverse candidates are out there [but] there are barriers that have traditionally been blocking them from getting access to these companies. The landscape of these tech firms has unfortunately not been very diverse, and each graduating class is hopefully an opportunity to change that.

What's next?
The companies are getting serious about diversity, and what excites us is the reality that the landscape can and will change. We're just excited and humbled to be a part of that.

In-state draft prospects for Eagles

A look at local players looking to get drafted.

LUKE MILLER
sports@metro.us

Last week we turned the spotlight onto some of the players already in the nation's brightest spotlight: players that the Eagles have a chance of obtaining with the eighth pick. This week we're looking at some prospects who reside in different levels of that national spotlight, but have all left a big mark on Pennsylvania through their college careers.

1 Kyle Friend, C, Temple

Friend is one player who would probably have benefited from an invitation to the combine. Friend benched 225 pounds 41 times at Temple's pro day. The best combine performance was by Arizona State's Christian Westerman, with 34 reps. Friend also recorded a 5.09 second 40-yard dash, which would have been good for eighth among offensive lineman at the combine.

At Temple, Friend rolled up 41 consecutive starts before a knee injury forced him to miss a contest as a senior. He was a starter for all four years and a team captain for three of them. NFL.com compares him to another Pennsylvania center: Penn State's A.Q. Shipley. Shipley was drafted in the seventh round by the Steelers in 2009 after winning the Dave Rimington Trophy (given to the best center in college football) as a senior. He has started 22 games in the league. Likely to be a late round selection, Friend has played center and guard. That versatility might make him a valuable backup for a team lacking quality depth on the offensive line. If you can think of one.

Tyler Matakevich excelled as a linebacker at Temple. GETTY IMAGES

2 Carl Nassib, DE, Penn State

Nassib's story was repeated a lot during the 2015 season: a former walk-on who then-Nittany Lion head coach Bill O'Brien had to have a gut-check moment with in terms of his dedication to football. Nassib worked himself onto scholarship and into opponent's backfields a Penn State-record 15.5 times during his senior year. All that won him the Lombardi Award and a chance to prove his former coach wrong in the pros (O'Brien has been nothing but congratulatory). Nassib is a tantalizing prospect at 6-foot-7, and if Jim Schwartz wants to bring the wide-nine back to Philadelphia, his skill set is a good match. He has already added strength and bulk to his frame — one reason for his late bloom — but will have to keep doing it in the pros. His older brother is Ryan Nassib, who played quarterback at Syracuse and was drafted by the Giants in 2013.

3 Tyler Boyd, WR, Pitt

CBS compares him to Nelson Agholor, for whatever positives and negatives that's worth. A lot of people were excited about Agholor entering 2015. His production is outstanding, and more reminiscent of the mark Jordan Matthews left on Vanderbilt. Boyd leaves Pittsburgh as a career record holder with 3,361 yards on 254 catches over just three years of work. Each of those three years he was catching passes from a new quarterback.
In 2015 he was the Panthers' best weapon and opponents knew it. Pittsburgh lined him up at running back (520 career rushing yards), asked him to throw a couple passes and used him to return kicks and punts. With all the roles and attention, Boyd still reeled in 91 receptions.

4 Tyler Matakevich, LB, Temple

The most-decorated player in school history, Matakevich leaves Temple a Chuck Bednarik and Bronko Nagurski Award winner, a First-Team All-American and three-time First-Team All-Conference selection, and owner of an eye-popping 493 tackles. In 2015 alone, he led Temple in tackles in every game.
As a senior in 2015, he brought four-and-a-half sacks (three in the season opener against Penn State) and five interceptions to the team to go along with 138 total tackles. It was his fourth straight season above the 100-tackle mark. Matakevich and Friend were the first players to be team captains for three years at Temple.
Matakevich was not a workout wonder at the combine. That and his size (6-feet, 238 pound) has teams questioning his projection to the NFL. It also means he should be available day two or even day three. Conveniently, the Eagles own the second pick on day three. But all it takes is one team to fall in love, and with a player like Matakevich, it's very likely someone will.

5 Jordan Lucas, S, Penn State

The first recruit to sign on for the Bill O'Brien era at Penn State, Lucas started 33 games there before a shoulder injury forced him to miss the end of his senior season. The injury kept him from the Senior Bowl and running any drills at the combine.
He was able to take the field for Penn State's pro day, and did as you might expect, posting a 4.45 second 40-yard dash and 38-inch vertical leap.

Mikal Bridges gets to the rim Sunday against Iowa. GETTY IMAGES

Villanova back in the Sweet 16

The Wildcats were highly impressive this past weekend.

MATT BURKE
@burke_metro
matthew.burke@metro.us

Jay Wright and the Villanova Wildcats had been earning a "quick exit" reputation in the past few years of the NCAA Tournament, but 2016 is a different story as 'Nova shredded No. 7 Iowa, 87-68, Sunday to advance to its first Sweet 16 since 2009.

The Wildcats will now face Miami, the No. 3 seed in the South Region on Thursday. The Sweet 16 and Elite Eight games in the South will be played at the University of Louisville.

There was little drama in Villanova's victory on Sunday as it was up on Iowa, 54-29, by halftime. The 'Cats had four players in double-figures as Josh Hart (19 points), Ryan Arcidiacono (16 points), Kris Jenkins (15 points) and Jalen Brunson (12 points) led the way scoring-wise. Defensively, the South's No. 2 seed put on a clinic — stepping in the way of Iowa passing lanes and not allowing the Hawkeyes' offense to find any sort of flow.

"That was one of our best games this year," Wright told CBS Sunday. "This team can win it all. But this team can lose to anybody, too. That's the beauty of this tournament."

One could easily make the case that the Wildcats looked like the best team in the entire dance this past weekend. They beat their Round of 64 opponent, UNC-Asheville, and Iowa by a combined score of 173-124. Kansas, which is the No. 1 seed in the South and the team that 'Nova could very well square off against in an Elite Eight matchup on Saturday, was the only other team during the first weekend that looked as impressive. The Jayhawks beat Austin Peay and UConn by a combined score of 178-140.

As for the more pressing matter of Miami (25-7 record). The Hurricanes toppled No. 14 Buffalo, 79-72, in the Round of 64 and then beat No. 11 Wichita State, 65-57, on Saturday. Senior guard Angel Rodriguez has been a force in the tournament thus far, as he pumped in 24 points against Buffalo and 28 points against Wichita State. Rodriguez plays at a frantic pace and the Hurricanes live and die based on his performances. His highlight-reel, midcourt alley-oop pass to Sheldon McClellan got Miami out of a funk against Wichita State but there have been times in his career that he has shot the Hurricanes out of games with poor shot selection.

Miami's head coach is Jim Larranaga, the man who authored George Mason's unprecedented run to the Final Four in 2006. Larranaga has been at the U since 2011.

Aries Confusion will result if you are inconsistent or send mixed signals. Consider your options before you initiate a change. Nurture your mental, physical and emotional health.

Taurus Spend time with loved ones today. A serious discussion will lead to the changes you want to make. You can lower your overhead if you consider an alternative lifestyle.

Gemini Check over personal papers and size up your financial obligations. Look for a way to avoid costly expenditures. Keeping secrets will lead to repercussions.

Cancer Helping others will bring you satisfaction. Romance will bring you closer to someone special. Make your arrangements early in order to avoid unpredictable situations.

Leo There is a fine line between being relentless and vengeful. Consider your motives and try your best to do what's right. Use your intellect, charm and expertise to get ahead.

Virgo Romance should be your priority. Sharing your feelings, intentions and plans will enhance a cherished relationship. A day trip will lead to a memorable journey.

Libra Put your cash in a safe place and work diligently to lower your overhead. Personal and home improvements should be geared toward future financial gains.

Scorpio Express your feelings. Negotiate on your behalf instead of relying on someone else to do so for you. Romance is encouraged. Use your imagination and make plans for two.

Sagittarius When it comes to being informed, you are best off making your conclusions based on fact, not hearsay. An honest approach to whatever you do will help you avoid a mishap.

Capricorn Consider your dreams and work toward building a lifestyle that will help you reach your goal. Love and romance will make your success worth so much more.

Aquarius Look out for pitfalls. Not everyone will be on your side or willing to help. Precision and dedication on your part will pay off. Don't fear making a personal change.

Pisces You may want to revise the way you live or how you earn your living. There is room for improvement, and with a little motivation, you'll capture your dream. EUGENIA LAST
